The Case of the Horrible Hiccups

Ruby woke up late one Tuesday morning. She leapt out of bed, ran to the bathroom, threw on her clothes and dashed into the kitchen. She grabbed a piece of toast from her mum's plate and started to gobble it down while she crammed her belongings into her bag.

“Ruby, slow down! You should eat more slowly,” warned her mum.

“No, I’ll be ... HIC!”

“I tried to tell you. Now you’ve got hiccups,” said Mum.

“They’ll go away ... HIC!” said Ruby, and she left for school.

But Ruby’s hiccups did not go away.

When Ruby saw her best friend, Luke, she said, “Will you come to the library with ... HIC ... me? I need to find out how to ... HIC ... make these hiccups stop!”

“Of course,” said Luke. “We’ll look for clues and together we’ll solve the mysterious case of the horrible hiccups.”

In the library, they logged onto computers. Ruby quickly found a website with suggestions that claimed would solve her problem.

The first solution was to drink a glass of water while her head was upside down. She tried to do this, but she snorted water up her nose and had a coughing fit.

The second solution was to hold her breath. She tried that, but the hiccups kept on interrupting her, so she couldn’t hold her breath for long.

The third solution was to blow into a paper bag. But a passing teacher took the bag away and told her not to be so silly.

Ruby was dejectedly searching for better ideas when Luke crept up behind her and tapped her on the shoulder.

“AAAAH! You gave me a fright! I didn’t hear you coming!” gasped Ruby.

“That was my plan,” said Luke. “I found a website that said that scaring people can make their hiccups vanish.”

And it worked. Ruby’s hiccups were completely gone. “Thanks to you, Detective Luke,” grinned Ruby, “The Case of the Horrible Hiccups has been solved.”

4 At first, why was Ruby not worried about her hiccups?
